

Residential School History, Intergenerational Trauma, and Healing

The National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation is the permanent, safe home for all statements, documents, and other materials gathered by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada. In this presentation, participants will learn a broad overview of the history of residential schools and other colonial systems that have impacted Indigenous communities. This will include a look at intergenerational trauma and the ongoing legacy of the residential school experience, residential school denialism, and reconciliation.

Presented by Sandra Bender, NCTR Community Engagement and Education Program Coordinator.
